Introduction

Background

 Millions of children in the United States live with caregivers who are not their parents. The majority of these caregivers are grandparents. Due to various socioeconomic factors, this trend in “kinship care” has seen a dramatic increase over the last decade.

This chapter gives a general review of the issues involved in kinship care, and provides assistance in dealing with problems that often arise.

What is Kinship Care?

Kinship care means different things to different people. In its broadest sense (in a definition used by the Child Welfare League of America), it is the “full time care, nurturing and protection of children by relatives, members of their tribes or clans, godparents, stepparents, or any adult who has a kinship bond with a child.” The State of California’s definition of kinship care is significantly narrower, limited to the care of children by “relatives.”

Regardless of the scope of kinship care’s definition, the goal of kinship care is to allow a child to grow into adulthood in a family environment.

Growth of Kinship Care

The 1990’s saw a dramatic increase in the number and proportion of children living with relatives. According to the Child Welfare League of America, this increase can be attributed to the benefits of kinship care, and to various other factors that have contributed to the breaking-up of parent-child relationships:

• Increased reporting of abuse and neglect;
• Increased use of crack cocaine and other drugs;
• Increased levels of poverty;
• Spread of HIV/AIDS;
• Parents’ struggles with physical and mental health problems;
• Family violence and parental incarceration;
• Decline in availability of traditional foster homes; and
• Increased number of children in foster care.

The Numbers

According to the Child Welfare Information Gateway, 32 percent of the 437,465 children in foster care in the United States on September 30, 2016 were living with relatives. Here, in Los Angeles County, more than half of the children in foster care were placed with relatives.

In 2012, 10 percent of the grandparents in the United States were living with a grandchild; of these 7 million grandparents, 2.7 million were raising their grandchildren without either parent in the home.

Forms of Caregiving

Relative Caregivers with Informal Authority

Many times, a child is placed in the care of a grandparent not through the courts, but via some informal agreement with the parent(s). In this kinship care situation, relatives simply assume responsibility for a child in need without involvement from the court system, child protective services, or other authorities.

Caregivers with informal authority may have physical custody of the child, but have limited rights to make decisions regarding the child. A grandparent may find it difficult to consent to medical procedures for the child, or to enroll the child in school. Additionally, the grandparent may not be eligible for as much financial assistance from the state and federal governments, and the type of care of assistance and medical care may be limited in scope.

Another disadvantage of an informal caregiving relationship is the lack of a sense of permanence. In most informal caregiver situations, the child’s parents have the authority at any time to return and take the child away.

It should be noted that a caregiver with informal authority may obtain greater authority by preparing a “Caregiver Authorization Affidavit.” The Affidavit is short, simple and very easy, and can address health care and school enrollment. The Affidavit is signed by the caregiver, who certifies that he or she has informed (or tried to inform) the child’s parent(s) of the caregiver’s intent to make decisions on the child’s behalf. A copy of the Affidavit is included at the conclusion of this chapter.

The following chart compares some of the main differences and similarities between informal relative caregivers and legal guardians.

Relatives As Foster Parents

When a child is placed in foster care by a county, the county social worker and court must give preferential consideration to an approved relative caregiver.

The parent must disclose all known relatives. Then, the social worker must contact the relatives given preferential consideration, to determine if any of those relatives wish that the child be placed with them. If a relative wishes to have the child placed with him, that relative must be assessed.

There have been significant changes in California law regarding foster care. One result of those changes is that a relative caregiver’s home must meet the same licensing standards as all other foster parent homes.

Adoption

Adoption is a process in which the mother’s and father’s parental rights are terminated. Relative caregivers who adopt are considered the child’s parents under the law. Adoption permanently terminates all of the biological parents’ rights and obligations; this includes visitation and financial support. Traditionally, adoption had been the long-term solution preferred by the dependency court, the court that oversees cases where a child has been removed from a parent’s home by the Department of Children and Family Services. However, adoption may not be an appropriate solution for many kinship families, and guardianship is now recognized as another appropriate option for providing stability in such a child’s life.

Legal Guardianship

A guardianship is a court-ordered change in custody by which parental rights are suspended and a “legal guardian” is appointed to provide care, custody, and control of the child. A legal guardian has the ability to act on the child’s behalf and make decisions regarding the child. The establishment of a guardianship does not terminate parental rights altogether, and a parent, or any other interested person, can petition the court to terminate the guardianship. A guardianship can be established in any juvenile court; however, most guardians are appointed in Probate Court.
Available Assistance For Informal Relative Caregivers

Financial Assistance

Grandparents who find themselves in an informal relative caregiver situation may be able to obtain financial assistance through CalWORKs (California Work Opportunity and Responsibility to Kids). CalWORKs is a statewide program that provides cash assistance to families with children under 19 years of age. The amount of the monthly payment for a child is based on the total number of children in the home and whether the adult caregiver also receives CalWORKs assistance. Payment in Los Angeles County for a single child ranges from about $355 to $392 per month.

All children who are U.S. citizens or legal permanent residents (green card) are eligible. The income of the caregiver relative is irrelevant. Financial assistance generally is greater if the child is in the foster care system, rather than in an informal relative caregiver situation.

Health Care Assistance

Medi-Cal is the primary means of medical assistance for children in informal caregiver situations. Medi-Cal is a statewide medical assistance program that provides coverage for minor children, and in some cases, the relative caring for them, if financial eligibility standards are met. A child receiving CalWORKs is automatically eligible for medical coverage through the Medi-Cal program, regardless of the relative caregiver’s household income.
Available Assistance When Relative Has Legal Authority Over Child

Financial Assistance and Health Care Assistance

When a child is under the care of a legal guardian, assistance from the CalWORKs and Medi-Cal programs can be available, just as that assistance can be available for a child in an informal caregiver situation. See above for a discussion of CalWORKs and Medi-Cal.

Foster Care Relative Caregivers

When a child is removed from a parent’s home due to neglect or abuse, the Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) acquires legal custody of the child, and the child is placed in the state foster care system. Under state law, relatives are given the first opportunity to take care of the child. The state retains legal custody of the child unless foster care relative caregivers obtain guardianship or adopt.

As discussed on the following pages, approved foster care relative caregivers are eligible for a wider range of financial and medical assistance, as compared to the assistance available to informal relative caregivers. Some of this assistance remains applicable even if the foster care relative subsequently obtains legal guardianship or adopts.

Additional Financial Assistance

The rate structure for foster care benefits in California has been drastically overhauled effective January 1, 2017. For many years, the foster care rate for a child was based upon a myriad of factors including the age of the child, the income of the home from which the child was removed, and the familial relationship of the child and the person with whom they were placed. California’s foster care rates are now tied to the health and behavioral needs of the child.

As part of the restructuring process, the rates for families that had been receiving assistance through the Kinship Guardianship Assistance Payment (Kin-GAP) or the Non-Related Legal Guardian (NRLG) Program, where guardianship was established on or after May 1, 2011, will not change. However, for Kin-GAP cases in which the guardianship was established and the dependency proceedings were terminated on or after May 1, 2011, the Kin-GAP rate may be increased upon reassessment of the circumstances of the caregiver and the needs of the child.

Similarly, the rates for families that had been receiving assistance through the Adoption Assistance Program (AAP), the monthly payments given to relative caregivers who adopt a child in the foster care program, will not change in cases where the AAP agreement was signed and the adoption was finalized prior to May 27, 2011. However, in cases where the AAP agreement was signed or the AAP eligible adoption was finalized on or after May 27, 2011, the rate may be reassessed based on the changing needs of the child or the circumstances of the adoptive parent.
Advantages of Adoption

Even if a foster care relative caregiver chooses to forgo the legal guardianship process, he or she can obtain formal custody by adopting the child. Indeed, this process provides the most permanent solution. The caregiver will still be able to get both medical and financial assistance after the process is complete; AAP benefits (explained on prior page) will continue until the child is 18.

Grandparents may consider adopting the child in an effort to secure permanency. Significantly, informal relative caregivers who adopt do not receive automatic financial or medical assistance from the state. Foster care relative caregivers, on the other hand, may be eligible to receive both Adoptive Assistance Program (AAP) benefits and Medi-Cal benefits.
